Behavioral Sciences and the Law:

Special Issue on Policing

Call for Papers

Behavioral Sciences & the Law announces a forthcoming special issue on Policing, to be edited by Christopher Slobogin, J.D., LL.M., a senior editor for the journal. Manuscripts that address the following issues are especially welcome: (1) research on the “benefits” and “costs” of various policing techniques, measured in procedural justice or other metrics; (2) research on how police should handle people with mental illness; (3) research on the psychological effects of surveillance by the police; (4) research on the psychological impact of policing on police officers.

Manuscripts should be 20 to 30 doubled-spaced typewritten pages and should comply with the editorial and referencing style of the most recent edition of the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association or the Harvard law Review’s The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation (but not both). Specific stylistic requirements can be found in a recent copy of the journal, or can be obtained via direct communication with the journal’s editors (Chris Slobogin, Charles Ewing and Alan Felthous).

To expedite processing, submit your manuscript electronically. Authors should use e-mail attachment, with the manuscript readable in Windows-based MS Word or Word Perfect formats. Manuscripts must be received before September 30, 2019. Please submit electronically to:

Christopher Slobogin
Vanderbilt University Law School
131 21st Ave. South
Nashville, Tn. 37203
c.slobogin@vanderbilt.edu